Hi,

I have just sent you in the mail a K2000 stock certificate for 50,000 shares as collateral. (I am also in the process of transferring 1M shares of K2000 stock into the names of Tony and Mat.) I am not going to contest the other items, namely, Mat's custody and claiming of taxation exemptions, and will notify the court accordingly. The only other thing that I have to deal with is the payment of $500 per month to you. You should be receiving a check from my tax refund that the Child Support folks diverted, and they also have the proceeds from my bank account that they seized a while back. In addition, as I mentioned, if you are in agreement, I will give you the entire proceeds of the sale of the Mercedes. I have looked at its blue book value and what that model is selling for in the Auto Trader, and the value is between $7000 - $10000 (which would cover 14 to 20 months of payments). The only thing that we have to deal with on this is the timing. The pacing item for me leaving for Australia (and thus selling the car) is the kitties. If you would be willing to keep Cloey and Jake for a few months, then I would be able to leave within the next month. Otherwise, I will have to wait at least until Jan or Feb to take the kitties with me. If I leave early, I will be able to get set up earlier and explore appropriate school/college/educational settings for Tony if he decides that he wants to come down to Australia when he is 18. Also if I leave early, I will be able to become financially viable sooner (I am financing everything with credit cards right now).

Let me know your thoughts on this.

Also, what is the status on Tony? Is he going to NAWA and, if so, what is the timing?

Mat emailed me today and is having some trouble with his math. He asked me to get together with him to explain it. How about that? Maybe he is getting turned on to doing better in school. How is he doing in English? You need to stay on top of him with it.

Johnnie
